

Janet Peters

Janet Peters is a registered psychologist who specialises in service development and project work in mental health and addictions. She has held several national roles in New Zealand and has published much of her work.

She has worked in Mental Health services for a total of 15 years and was the first National Project Manager for the public health Like Minds Like Mine project to counter stigma and discrimination associated with mental illness.

Janet was on the New Zealand Psychologists Board for seven years and now works as a contractor. Her recent work focused on getting better information and access to talking therapies across the mental health and addiction sector in New Zealand. In addition Janet is contracted to work part-time as the International Liaison for IIMHL.
